Lean toward hands-on learning to truly know how to do something correctly

Feel interested in getting experience working hands-on with patients

Feel reassured that the tour showed college as a great place to learn hands-on

Look forward to working at my own pace with online classes

Stick with in-person classes where I am able to raise my hand

Feel hesitant about sitting (comfortably) in a classroom

Look for a more affordable school near me, with options for paying, scholarships I can get

Research which degree might cost less

Try to figure out what tuition really costs so I can tell if I can afford it

Look into which credits will transfer to see if I can pay less overall

Hope to avoid prerequisite classes because I don't want to pay for what I already know

Regret letting my EMT registration number expire because I could have gotten a job with no extra schooling costs

Feel upset I have so much debt but no degree yet

“ ... moving from suburban Houston (with a fenced backyard) to a loft in Chicago has been a big adjustment. ... Jane walks me and my dog buddy, Nussy, 3 times day in our nice neighborhood, but it's not the same as running free in a backyard.”

Feel melancholy about not being able to run free in my backyard, now that Jane lives in a loft and takes me on walks

Q: (from Sonja Bobrowska)

As I was trying to group, I encountered summaries that contain two parts: "Do something _in order to_ do something else" or "Achieve something _by_ doing something else"?

is the concept actually two concepts?
if it's one concept, is it summarized unclearly?
